Anthony Curtis

Tony leads the New York metro Transfer Pricing practice for PricewaterhouseCoppers.

A senior economist in PwC's Global Transfer Pricing Services Group, Tony has over 20 years experience conducting economic analysis for the Firm. For 18 years, he has specialized in the economics of inter-company pricing, including planning studies to help taxpayers determine appropriate transfer prices for future transactions, economic studies for use in the defense of transfer prices under examination, and economic analyses for Advance Pricing Agreement negotiations with the IRS and foreign tax authorities.

Tony has considerable experience leading large teams of PwC transfer pricing personnel on global planning and documentation efforts and is the global transfer pricing liaison for the overall Retail, Consumer, and Industrial Products team. For several years, Tony was the coordinator of PwC's Global Core Documentation service offering and the Americas editor for PwC's Pricing Knowledge Network.

He has broad experience analyzing the transfer pricing issues under FIN 48, as well as the effect of the new Cost Sharing and Service Regulations. He is a frequent author and presenter. He has worked closely on dispute resolution projects with international teams in multiple jurisdictions.

Tony previously taught graduate courses in Business Economics and Money and Banking at Johns Hopkins University's Washington, D.C. campus. He has a MBA, as well as a BBA, with a concentration in Business Economics and Public Policy from The George Washington University and has completed several graduate classes in taxation at Fordham University.
